Livingston County Encourages Residents to Participate in ROC COVID

Mount Morris, NY, May 28, 2020 — All Livingston County residents are encouraged to sign up for ROC COVID, a health screening tool that could help prevent the further spread of COVID-19 throughout the region. Currently, there are close to 19,000 participants from 11 counties, according to the ROC COVID dashboard.

Scientists and information technology staff from the University of Rochester Medical Center and Rochester Regional Health developed ROC COVID. It is an online survey tool consisting of questions that you answer daily, even if you have no symptoms. Questions include whether you have a fever, a cough, chills or other primary COVID-19 symptoms in addition to basic demographic information.

As a participant, you will receive daily reminders to take the quick survey at ROCCOVID.org.

Common Ground Health, a regional health planning organization, will securely house and analyze collected data. The data analysis will allow for an increased understanding of COVID-19, measure efforts to slow its progression, and help determine where to focus testing or adjust stay-at-home and physical distancing requirements.

If you are a University of Rochester Medical Center or Rochester Regional Health employee, you are asked not to participate in ROC COVID; however, you should continue to respond to your own internal surveys.
